MRS. MOODY GIVEN HARD
GAME: SCORES MUDDLED

Wimbledon, To-day.

Something like a sensation was caused in the All-England Men's Singles Championship, at Wimbledon yesterday by the defeat of H. W. (Bunny) Austin, one of the seeded Englishmen, by Donald Budge, of America, in four sets, since the red-headed Californian is only ranked 20th in the United States.

Austin won the first set with comparative ease and had gained a good lead in the second before Budge fell into his stride and began stroking beautiful long backhand winners and serving aces. Volleys with a real punch in his strokes, Budge levelled the scores at 5-
all. The games then ran with service until the 18th game,
when he captured the set.

RUSSO-RUMANIAN AGREEMENT

Categorical Denial
In Moscow

"CHINA MAIL" SPECIAL
Moscow, To-day.

The reports of negotiations being conducted for the conclusion of a Russo-Rumanian pact of mutual assistance, on the model of the similar pacts between Soviet Russia, France and Czechoslovakia, are categorically denied by the Journal de Moscou, an organ published in the French language and close to the Commissariat for Foreign Affairs.

The paper states that the question of the conclusion of such a pact has not been discussed nor is it likely to be discussed in the near future. — Trans-Ocean Ser-

STUNT FLYING IN CANTON BY YOUNG GERMAN

Requested To Remain
As Instructor

TAKING PART IN AMERICAN
NATIONAL AIR RACE

[From Our Own Correspondent]

Canton, To-day.

Impressed by the stunt flying of Mr. Gerd Achgelis, the Canton
Air Force is said to have requested the German aviator to remain here at least for a short while as instructor in acrobatic flying to the officers of the air corps here.

Mr. Achgelis, who is the winner of many air trophies in Europe and the United States, is due to leave here for Cleveland, Ohio, U.S.A., some time this month to take part in the National Air Race.

A stunt flying exhibition was staged yesterday morning by Mr.
Achgelis at the South-west aerodrome for the benefit of the Canton
Air Force and general public, who were thrilled to see the wonderful flying feats. There were awe inspiring moments, when the young aviator in looping, came close to the ground.

FASTEST TRAIN IN THE WORLD

"Flying Coloner"
Sets Record

"CHINA MAIL" SPECIAL

Berlin, To-day.

The streamlined motor-driven express train "Flying Coloner," the counterpart to the famous "Flying Hamburger," made its first trip on the regular schedule on Monday, covering the distance from Cologne to Berlin in 5 hours 9 minutes, which is 1 1/2 hours better than the time made by the fastest steam-driven express. A maximum speed of 170 kilometres an hour was reached during the trip, which makes the "Flying Coloner" the world's fastest train by a wide margin.

Similar motor-driven trains of two to four coaches will be put in service on 13 other main lines in Germany in the course of this summer. — Trans-Ocean Service.

ABYSSINIAN DISPUTE UNSOLVED

UNPRECEDENTED OFFER BY MR. EDEN

NO EQUIVALENT RETURN DEEMED NECESSARY: HO USE OBJECTIONS

London, To-day.

Britain's turned down offer to Italy in order to obtain a final settlement of the Italo-Abyssinian dispute was described by Mr. Anthony Eden when he rendered an account of his recent visit to Rome and Paris in the House of Commons yesterday.

The British proposal was an offer to Abyssinia of a trip-of territory in British Somaliland which would give Abyssinian access to the sea. This proposal was intended to facilitate such territorial and economic concessions by Abyssinia to Italy as might be involved in the agreed settlement.

Britain asked for no concessions in return for this arrangement except grazing rights for her nomadic tribes in such territory as might be ceded to Italy. Only the gravity of the situation could justify the concession of British territory without an equivalent return.

He much regretted that the suggestion did not commend itself to Signor Mussolini, who was unable to accept it as a basis for the solution of the dispute.

Mr. Eden explained that the object of his visit to Paris was to give France a whole and frank explanation of the Anglo-German naval agreement and also to consult as to the best way of proceeding to negotiations on the matters mentioned in the London communiqué of February 3.

CANTON POLICY SUPPORTED BY OTHER PROVINCES

Military Delegates
Gathering

DEVELOPMENTS EXPECTED

[From Our Own Correspondent]

Canton, To-day.

Fresh political developments are expected here shortly as the result of the presence of many delegates representing military leaders in Yunnan, Hunan, Shansi and other provinces.
These leaders are stated to be sympathetic with Canton's viewpoint on national politics.

The circular telegrams issued by the Kuomintang South-west
Executive Committee on June 22 and June 28 demanded resistance to Japanese incursions, but Nanking has not seen fit to take such suggestion seriously.
On the other hand, Japanese reports stated that Mr. Wang Ching-wei, Minister of Foreign Affairs, has determined to enter into closest relations with Japan and to suppress any anti-Japanese movement. Japanese advisers, it is alleged, will be appointed to various provincial governments.

Such policy is directly opposed to the firm stand of Canton and will probably divide opinion between the Central authorities and the South-west.

It is likely that Canton will issue further telegrams advising Nanking what to do in coping with Japan's expansionist movement in this country.

MONGOLIAN SITUATION REVIEWED IN COMMONS

TRIBAL LEADERS CHOOSING BETWEEN JAPAN AND SOVIET

London, To-day.

The situation in Mongolia was the subject of questions in the House of Commons by Sir Alfred Knox (C, Wycombe), who suggested that in view of the rumours of the revival of national feeling in Mongolia and the chance of Outer and Inner Mongolia coming together, it was vitally important to discover whether the tendency of the tribal leaders was to join up with Japan or with Russia, and asked would Sir Samuel Hoare ask for a report from the Ambassador at Peiping.

Sir Samuel Hoare promised greater extent than the latter.
There were divergencies of opinion between the leaders of both areas and he would prefer not to draw any general inference of the nature indicated by Sir Alfred Knox.

Sir Samuel Hoare also stated that, according to the latest reports, the situation in Inner Mongolia was generally normal. Certain changes of administration in Chahar Province and the disposition of the Chinese troops there were recently discussed between the Chinese and Japanese military authorities in North China. It was believed that a settlement of the question was in sight. — Reu-

CRISIS IN FRANCE

SOCIALISTS
IMPORTANT DECISION

ALLEGED REVOLT

GOVERNMENT URGED TO INTERFERE

"CHINA MAIL" SPECIAL

Paris, To-day.

The Radical Socialist Party is now undergoing a grave crisis, according to an admission in M.
Henriot's organ, "Le Nouvelle".

The question of whether the party should stay in the Government majority or join the other groups of the Left is now acute, asserts the paper, pointing out that the crisis is aggravated by the attitude of the party's left wing under M.
Daladier, who in a recent meeting supported the Socialist and Communist speakers advocat-
and warning against a dictatorship of the Right.

The anxiety prevailing in the party's Right wing is increased by the fact that the so-called "People's Front" is planning big demonstrations for the national holiday, July 14.

REVOLT RUMOURS

In view of the allegedly existing danger that a revolt may be attempted, the paper represents the party's Right wing
ask the Government to interfere.
The Daladier incident and the question of how a rupture within the party can be avoided, the Right wing journals assert, have been put on the agenda of tomorrow's meeting of the managing committee of the party. —
Le Jour, in this connection, reminds its readers that M. Henriot and Chantemps both warned Daladier when the present Government was being formed that they would resign the Cabinet if their party's friends should bring the Government into difficulties.

TRAINING THE HAIR

In The Way It Should Go

TREATING THE SCALP

BY LADY KITTIE VINCENT

Well-tended nails are a matter of careful attention, a poor complexion can be camouflaged, but hair is hair. If it is ugly, looks unkempt, or is not properly arranged it can ruin the prettiest dress and the loveliest face.

It is of no use thinking that a bad head of hair will come right in some miraculous manner, because there is probably something radically wrong with the roots. Before treating that side of the question it is as well to experiment with various ways of doing the hair.

While one must arrange it in the way which suits the individual best, it is worth while trying to combine a becoming coiffure with the natural way in which the hair grows and falls.

Of Its Own Accord
To do this, take a comb (this is best done when the hair has not been "set" for some time) and run it briskly through the hair. You will be sure to find that it is inclined to go in a certain direction of its own accord, and if you are clever, or your hairdresser is clever, it will always pay to "set" it as nearly as possible in that particular direction.

Some hair grows in a double crown, and then it is practically impossible to make a good side parting, for it is going against the direction of the growing hair, and the most you can do is to make a very short parting. A centre parting may get over the difficulty, but the latter is ageing and becoming only to a certain type of classical feature.

It is nearly always possible to find out the way the hair likes to lie, and if you "set" it in that direction you will have the pleasure of being able to run the comb carelessly through it, knowing that it will fall agreeably into those waves.

If you suffer from greasy hair which needs constant washing the probabilities are that the oiliness is due to a secretion at the roots. This upsets the whole "working order" of the scalp, and your hair is either in a state of frightful dryness just after washing, or else looks like greasy hay.

VIA SIBERIA—Letters and post cards for Europe and South America are forwarded "via Siberia" 20 supercharged.

REGISTERED and PARCEL MAILS are closed 15 minutes earlier than the time given above, unless otherwise stated, and where mails are advertised to close at or before 9 a.m., registered and parcel mails are closed at 5 p.m. on the previous day.

AIR MAIL—Imperial Airways via Singapore, Batavia-Amsterdam via Singapore, Saigon-Marseilles via Saigon. Correspondence for Europe and intermediate countries will be accepted for transmission by these services. Rates and all particulars are shown in the schedules exhibited at the General Post Office and Kowloon Office. All letters etc. must be marked "By Air Mail" and handed in at the General Post Office. Unless superseded by despatch by a specific air mail service, correspondence will be forwarded by the first service available.

For dressy sports or afternoon lawn affairs, lady chooses this frock of white sheer crepe trimmed with white angora bands. The cavalier's cape is of the dress fabric and fastens at the neckline with a draw cord of the angora. Verree Tessdale, screen actress, is the model.

This condition calls for examination under the microscope by an expert, and a few treatments and the intelligent use of a lotion at home will restore the scalp to health.

Soft And Cleaning
Hair should not need washing more than once in three weeks, and during that period should be neither dry nor greasy, but soft and gleaming. The moment that you pass your hand across your hair and find it harsh, you know that all is not well.

So little attention is paid to the question of grey hair by beauty writers, it being often tacitly assumed that the owners thereof will dye it, thus hiding their shame! Grey hair can be lovely, and perhaps is prettiest of all in conjunction with a young face. The secret is to keep it very light-looking in its arrangement and to avoid stiff waves, but, on the other hand, never allow it to appear unkempt.

It generally pays to keep grey hair well thinned and cut in a tapering manner so as to allow plenty of light and shade. This helps to preserve the silvery effect.

Lumps of grey hair are ageing and unbecoming, and it should always be treated as a frame to the face, even more so than other coloured hair.

SATIN BOWLER

Looks Attractive With White Shantung Suit

A white shantung suit with a black silk blouse and closely knitted black wool belted coat is a good choice. To complete this, a hat made after the style of a bowler in satin, with cascade of white cotton flowers, would look well.

Hollywood Beauty Hints

Treatment Of Eyes And Hands Included

To rest your eyes, Anne Shirley fits pads of clean cotton dipped into tea over them.

Lipstick
The colour, as well as the method of application is important in making the lips seem fuller. A bright lipstick, applied to the entire surface of the small mouth, does much to improve its contours.

When Cream Is Used
If you cleanse your face with a cream, follow it with a mild astringent before applying a powder base.

Perfumed Finger Tips
It is charming and perhaps a bit unusual to touch the tips of the fingers lightly with perfume when dressing for formal occasions.

Flat Hats
These tiny flat hats are very new and chic, but they are not becoming if your face is too broad.

Don't wear too pink a rouge if you have red hair. A red-brown tint is good if your hair is auburn, while an orange cast is best for the girl with red-gold hair.

For A Dry Complexion
Use the same treatment for dry, lined hands as would be used for a dry complexion. This includes washing the hands with oil base soaps, massaging creams into the skin, and protecting the hands as much as possible from the drying elements, sun and wind.

Nail Advice
Use a good cuticle softener every night before retiring to prevent ragged locking finger nails.

ASCOT STYLES

Breton Sailor Included In Hat Fashions

METAL TRIMMINGS

Models for Ascot include a large shady hat of black tulle (the brim stitched with black and white osprey curls in front), a black felt Breton sailor with a band of moire and taffeta carried over the crown and under the brim, and a "coolie" model in black felt and gathered taffeta.

One is in cherry-red paribantal trimmed with plum-coloured ribbon and a cluster of shaded plums. The other is a romantic affair with black feathers curling gracefully back over the paper panama brim.

Metal flowers, too, are used, notably on a flat hat of blue haku straw trimmed with a wreath of gold foil and blue flowers pressed flat round the crown.

HOUSEHOLD WRINKLE

A wooden coat-hanger in which has been fixed several hooks for small brooms, dusters, and dustpans makes an excellent improvised housemaid's box.

PACKING FOR A HOLIDAY

Four Useful Hints On What To Take

WRONG ACCESSORIES MAY SPOIL VACATION

Packing for a short holiday is a comparatively easy affair. The main thing is to learn the art of concentration on what will really be required.

One may be fairly certain that the woman who "travels light" will appear in exactly the right clothes for whatever the occasion may be.

The hat box should contain the practical beret for wind or rain, a plain stitched hat in summer felt or fabric straw, and a shady linen or panama for the sun.

Shoes
Shoes always present a little difficulty. Neat leather or suede should be worn to travel, so that two more pairs may probably suffice—with crepe soles for country and linen shoes to match the hat for heat. An evening pair of mixed metal-fabric will suffice for many dresses.

Umbrella and mackintosh are nearly always necessary, and should be very smart. Waterproofed gaiters, useful for a really wet spell, are very attractive to-day.

Accessories
For evening wear the fur wrap is generally acceptable. Other accessories, such as scarves, bags, belts, gloves, cambric neckwear, and one or more flowers, must all be in accord with the clothes that have been packed. It is well to think out the question of accessories very carefully. The wrong ones may entirely ruin your holiday scheme.

SCARLET HATS

Breton Sailor Still Favoured

There are still a few hats in scarlet which can strike an interesting "pop note" when completing the all-white and all-black tailored suit.

Race-hats are either of fine felt or shining straw. There are caps, too, swathed in turban-fashion, and made of scarlet polished fabric.

Some small shapes in black tagel show tiny wreaths in black and scarlet berries. The plain Breton sailor is favoured by the youthful. It is good in black and white straw, especially with tailored suits.

"TRANS-ATLANTIC MERRY-GO-ROUND"—KINGS THEATRE

Sydney Howard the British comedian, makes his first bid for American screen honours in Reliance's "Trans-Atlantic Merry-Go-Round," showing at the King's Theatre to-day. Howard is a member of an all-star cast including Jack Benny, Nancy Carroll, Gene Raymond, Mitz Green, Sid Silver, Frank Parker, The Boswell Sisters, Sidney Blackmer, Ralph Morgan and other stage, screen, and radio personalities.

Howard is a "Yorkshire man," born in the old town of Yeadon. He had contributed his services to many amateur theatricals while working for his father, a printer and manufacturer of paper bags. Then one day he noticed an advertisement in a newspaper calling for a "part-time" comedian. He made his professional start in the miniature variety shows then in vogue at seaside resorts. After four years of this he was signed for one of the first revues ever staged in England. He toured with the show for 14 months and was just gaining recognition when the World War broke out. After the Armistice he had to begin all over again.

After four years of touring Great Britain and South Africa as a "single" in vaudeville and as a featured comedian in popular revues, he burst into fame as "Battling Smith" in "Hit the Deck." Then came "Funny Face" with Fred and Adele Astaire, and other revues.

"DAVID COPPERFIELD"—ORIENTAL THEATRE

Charles Dickens' immortal classic comes to the Oriental Theatre to-day with the mammoth cast essential to do it justice. This is one of the greatest contenders for the title of "The best picture of 1935."

No fewer than 65 stars and featured players are included in the cast. Among the stars are W. C. Fields, Lion Barrymore, Madge Evans, Maureen O'Sullivan, Edna May Oliver, Lewis Stone, Frank Lawton, Freddie Bartholomew, Elizabeth Allan, Roland Young, Basil Rathbone, Hugh Williams and Herbert Mundin.

It is one of the few pictures on record in which the writer of the adaptation, himself one of the leading novelists of contemporary literature, plays one of the roles; the novelist is Hugh Walpole, the eminent writer and authority on Dickens.

"THE GREAT FLIRTATION"—ALHAMBRA THEATRE

A clue to the reason why so many actresses seek divorces from an actor husband is contained in the Paramount film, "The Great Flirtation," which opens to-day at the Alhambra Theatre, with Elissa Landi and Adolphe Menjou in the principal roles.

In this story of the romance of an exotic actress and a temperamental actor, which was written by Gregory Ratoff, Adolphe Menjou, as the husband, gives Elissa Landi, his wife, a great deal more advice than love. Because she cannot find romance in her husband, she turns to other men. And so these two must lose love to learn that they ever possessed it in the surprise climax that closes the film.

"The Great Flirtation" was produced by Charles R. Rogers and directed by Ralph Murphy. David Manners and Lynne Overman are featured with Miss Landi and Menjou.

"GALLANT LADY"—STAR THEATRE

Clive Brook and Ann Harding are names that ensure a sound picture and their latest, "Gallant Lady," is certainly that.

Miss Harding has excellent scope for her ability as an emotional actress in this film of a woman who not only loved too well but who also loved too often.

The men in her life include Otto Kruger and Paul Cavanagh, two who do their bit towards making this one of the best pictures of the kind to reach Hong Kong in recent years.

For the first time in four years Mrs. Emma Glockner of Los Angeles, says her brother, Bruno Hauptmann, in the death house at Trenton, New Jersey. She brought a Los Angeles attorney to assist in the fight to save the Lindbergh baby's slayer from the chair.

MAN WHO LIKES SCOTSMEN

Came 3,500 Miles To See Them

"THEY HAVE MADE ME RICH"

Mr. John Milton Cork of Toronto, controller of a chain of grocery shops in Canada, is a great believer in Scotsmen.

He thinks so much of them that he has come 3,500 miles to see the country that produces such "keen, upright, efficient people."

He employs 700 people in the 112 shops he controls. Half of them were born in Scotland.

Interviewed at the Savoy Hotel, London, he said: "No Scotsman has ever applied to me in vain for work."

Mr. Cork is of English descent.

His liking for Scotsmen began with Mr. William Jamieson. "Bill came out to Canada from Aberdeen," he said, "and was the first man I engaged when I opened my first shop sixteen years ago. He is now in business on his own and doing well."

Grandest City

"He was so efficient that I engaged another Scot and then another. I have never been to England before, but I have heard so much of the wonders of Scotland from the hundreds of Scots I now employ that I have come to take a look at the country."

Mr. Cork has an elaborate itinerary drawn up by Mr. Jamieson. It says:—

"Do not waste time in Glasgow, but follow the route I have given you to Aberdeen. It is the grandest city in Scotland, and do not miss the fish market. But you will have to be on the quay early."

"Stop awhile at Edinburgh, but Aberdeen is the place."

Mr. Cork's final words were: "Scotsmen have made me rich. My business has a turnover of £5,000,000 a year, and those Scots helped me pull through the depression when other people were going down like tinpins."

"BEFORE MIDNIGHT"—QUEEN'S THEATRE

One of the most thrilling of mystery dramas to reach the Colony for some time opens to-day at the Queen's Theatre.

It is called "Before Midnight" and stars the talented Ralph Bellamy as the sleuth who tracks down the perpetrators of the murders which punctuate the story at various intervals. A large cast has been assembled for the picture and the audience will find it a difficult though intriguing task at sampling to beat Bellamy in unravelling the mystery.

BRIDGE NOTES

Fatal Procrastination
By Ely Colburn

Plays meant to fool the opponents and cause them to do what they should not, or not to do what they should, are likely to be particularly effective when made at the beginning of a hand. For this there are several excellent reasons. First, the opponents at this stage of the play know less about the hand than they do in the later rounds, and are therefore reckoning with possibilities rather than actualities. Second, they have not yet had much time to think. Third, some players have the unfortunate habit of postponing their decisions, even when it would be mentally possible to make them earlier, until it is too late. Against these chronic procrastinators, of course, early surprise plays are even more effective than against the generality of players. Procrastination is the thief not only of time, but of tricks.

In to-day's hand the South player avoided sure defeat by forcing East to make the vital decision of the hand—whether or not to discard a King—on the second trick.

The bidding:
South West North East
1C 1H 2C 4H

Pass Dbl Pass Pass

It is easily seen that by utilizing one or two spade ruffs, the North and South players could have defeated East and West's five-heart contract by either 500 or 900 points.

On the other hand, the North player could not be certain that the opposing contract was unmakeable, and rather than risk losing the rubber, he decided to gamble on six clubs.

It is further evident that six clubs is a hopeless contract, as two diamond tricks must be lost. The Declarer, however, did not resign himself to defeat. After ruffing the opening heart lead he saw one ray of hope. If he could strip both opponents' hands of spades and clubs and then play the Ace and another diamond, and if the opponent who won the second diamond did not have a third one to lead, an automatic ruff and discard would ensue on whatever other suit was led.

However, South realized that if he immediately went about stripping the hand, the defence would soon realize what was occurring, and by the time the diamond Ace was led, would take the proper unblocking measures to defeat his purpose.

Therefore, at trick 2 South laid down the Ace of diamonds. Had the East player been sufficiently frightened he would have realized that there was something peculiar in this play and that it almost surely would not cost him a thing to drop his diamond King on the Ace.

However, East was not sufficiently clever to do this. The South player, confirmed by ruffing all his spades in Dummy and the last heart in his own hand, and drawing the adverse trump, now led a low diamond and poor East had no choice but to follow the trick with his new black King. He was forced to lead a heart and this card was of course, trumped in Dummy, the last diamond being discarded from the South hand.

There is no doubt but that East should be charged for his failure to unblock, but South, should at least get some mark of commendation for his brilliant early surprise attack.

BULGARIAN MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Public Statement Refused

GOVERNMENT LIKELY TO FAIL

"CHINA MAIL" SPECIAL
Sofia, To-day.

The Bulgarian Finance Minister, M. Rysskov, handed in his resignation on his return from a journey abroad made with the object of effecting a settlement of the Bulgarian debts, refusing, however, to give any public statement of the reasons for this step.

The Government will be compelled to resign, since the activities of the former political opponents of the party are making the position more and more embarrassing. On Sunday, for instance, the Police President of Sofia was obliged to arrest a number of political leaders whose names have so far been withheld, though it is understood that they belong to the circle around the well-known Colonel Veltcheff, who was the prime mover in the coup d'état on May 13, 1934, when he proclaimed a dictatorship.

An order for Colonel Veltcheff's arrest is stated to have been issued by the Government, but has not yet been executed owing to his having fled into the provinces or abroad.—Trans-Ocean Service.

ANOTHER TRIUMPH FOR GERMAN CARS

Mercedes-Benz Wins Barcelona Race

"CHINA MAIL" SPECIAL
Barcelona, To-day.

Mercedes-Benz cars' sixth major triumph in the present European racing season was witnessed by more than 65,000 spectators here on Monday, when the Italian Fiat, at the wheel of a car of this famous German make won the Grand Prix of Barcelona against strong international competition.

The second place in the race, which, owing to the extreme heat, was not started till late in the afternoon, went to another Mercedes-Benz car driven by the German Caracciola.

The winning car's time of 2 hours, 27.40 minutes for the 265 kilometers distance constitutes a new record.—Trans-Ocean Service.

TEETH LIKE HUMAN

Baby Chimpanzee's First Molar

BOTTOM INCISOR

Jubilee, the Zoo baby chimpanzee, has cut her first tooth. It is the left bottom incisor tooth and its appearance has roused much interest because the bottom incisor teeth are the first teeth cut by a human baby.

George, the Zoo's centenarian alligator, recently believed to have become a reformed character, celebrated the Jubilee, by having a "night out"—Keepers found him lying one morning in the middle of the pond occupied by his next-door neighbours, his mouth turned suggestively towards them as they huddled together in fear on the banks of the pond.

George had uprooted the iron railings separating him from the neighbouring crocodiles and alligators, none of whom he injured, for his teeth are no longer what they were, but he managed to horrify them.

He went home without any trouble when the keeper arrived, but as soon as the fence had been repaired he tried to climb over it. Too heavy to carry off this feat he fell back into his own pond.

VOLUNTARY WINDING UP OF THE A.O.F.C.

Prior to putting the facts of the case before the Court, Mr. Jenkin intimated that he wished to make things quite clear with regards to the relative positions of the creditors. The first four were being represented by Messrs. Wilkinson & Grist and Mr. Harold Lee, but the fifth one, the Cheung Lee-chung firm, had not stated whether it was a creditor or a contributory and also what attitude it intended adopting. He therefore asked that the fifth creditor be called. His Honour complied with the request, but it soon transpired that the firm had no representative in Court.

Facts Presented

In putting the facts of the case before His Lordship, Mr. Jenkin stated that the Company was incorporated in the United States Laws of 1926. It had several branches, the head office being in Shanghai. But this, together with the branches, was already in process of winding up, and in bringing this petition, he expressed that he was merely applying for a similar order as had been accorded the other branches.

Mr. Jenkin assured the Court that all the papers were in order. At a preliminary hearing conducted in Chambers, the Official Receiver, Mr. J. J. Hayden, had been appointed liquidator and Mr. Archibald Ritchie had been appointed manager. Mr. Jenkin also requested that the original liquidator and manager should be allowed to continue in their respective offices with the same powers.

Mr. Harold Lee then informed the Court that, on behalf of the four creditors whom he represented, he wished to support the petition.

EX-RECTOR OF STIFFKEY

Wins Action Over Limerick

An action by the former rector of Stiffkey, Norfolk, Mr. Harold Davidson, over a limerick in a gramophone record was settled before Mr. Justice Finlay in the King's Bench Division recently. Defendants were the Chrysalis Gramophone Record Manufacturing Company, of City-road, E.C., and Messrs. Marks and Spencer, of Baker-street, W., the makers and distributors respectively of the record.

Mr. Davidson, who complained that the limerick suggested he was a man of immoral habits, accepted a sum paid into court by the defendants, who withdrew the gramophone record when their attention was called to the matter.

The mean temperature for the month was 82.2 degrees Fahrenheit, which is 1.2 degrees greater than normal. A maximum of 90.2 degrees was recorded on the 29th, and a minimum of 76.0 degrees on the 3rd and 18th. The mean relative humidity was 83 per cent, which is normal.

The total sunshine recorded was 154 hours, against a normal of 164 hours. This was the third successive month in which sunshine has been deficient.

A maximum wind velocity of 55 m.p.h. from the S.W. was recorded in the early morning of

FRENCH VIEWPOINT
M. Laval frankly explained the French view of the agreement. It recognised that Anglo-French collaboration was necessary for many European problems. The necessary measures to this end, in which other countries were interested, were being taken. The same happy conclusion (except as regards Abyssinia) resulted from the talks with Signor Mussolini. There was no reason to hope that the best line of negotiations might not shortly be found.

Although the three Governments did not attach the same importance or urgency to all the various items on the programme, it should be possible to agree to the method whereby with negotiations with the other Governments they might unite to contribute a solution of the problems.

MANY QUESTIONS
A stream of questions followed the statement by Mr. Eden, who declared that Britain was not inspired by egotistic motives nor by the consideration of her interests in Africa, but as he pointed out to Signor Mussolini, by her membership of the League, on which British policy was founded.

Mr. George Lansbury, leader of the Opposition, immediately asked Sir Samuel Hoare, Foreign Secretary, what steps the Government proposed to bring the pressure of European public opinion to bear on Italy.

INFORMATION WITHHELD
Sir Samuel Hoare said he would give the House full details of the discussions as soon as he was at liberty to do so. He was withholding the information because he did not want to prejudice the course he would like to see pursued.

Mr. Lansbury said that the House was anxious to safeguard itself against another accomplished fact, as in the case of China and Japan.

Objections to the cession of British territory without consulting the House were also raised in another quarter.—Reuter.

B. W. S. REPORT

London, To-day.
Mr. Anthony Eden, Minister for League Affairs, in reply to a question by Mr. George Lansbury, leader of the Opposition, made a statement in the House of Commons yesterday regarding his recent visits to Rome and Paris.

The objects of the Paris visit, he said, were to give the French Government a full and frank explanation on the subject of the Anglo-German naval agreement and to consider in consultation with the French Government ways and means of making progress as quickly as possible with the negotiation of all the matters enumerated in the London Communiqué of February 3.

He gave the French Minister, M. Laval, an account of the contents of the Anglo-German agreement and described to him the circumstances in which it was negotiated and the reasons which had led His Majesty's Government to conclude it.

M. Laval explained with equal frankness the view which the French Government took of this agreement. He also explained his view of its bearing upon the various European problems in the solution of which the two Governments are engaged.

CLOSE COLLABORATION
It was recognised in the course of conversation that for the settlement of these questions, such for example as the air pact and air limitation, the Eastern pact, the Central European pact and the agreement on land armaments, close collaboration between France and Great Britain was necessary.

"These are, however," he said, "questions which do not interest France and Britain alone. We are therefore at present seeking in conjunction with the French Government the form of collaboration best designed to secure the fulfilment, as quickly and completely as possible, by all countries of the programme of London Communiqué."

"At the close of the discussion upon these same subjects which I held subsequently with Signor Mussolini in Rome we were happy to be able to record an agreement as to the possibility of continuing to work for European appeasement in accordance with the guiding principles laid down in the London Communiqué and the Sresca resolution."

"There is now, therefore, reason to hope that the best line of negotiation may shortly be found. Moreover, I cannot doubt that, although the three Governments may not attach the same importance or ascribe the same urgency to all the various items of the programme, it should be possible to agree upon the method whereby, in free and equal negotiation with other Governments, they may unite to contribute to the solution of these problems."

ABYSSINIAN DISPUTE
"I now turn to discuss the difficulty between Italy and Abyssinia, in regard to which I had conversation with Signor Mussolini expressed to Signor Mussolini the grave concern of His Majesty's Government at the turn which events were taking between Italy and Abyssinia. Our motives were neither egotistic nor dictated by our interests in Africa, but by our membership of the League of Nations."

"I said that British Foreign policy was founded upon the League. His Majesty's Government could not therefore remain indifferent to events which might profoundly affect the League's future. Upon this issue public opinion in this country felt very strongly."

"It was only through collective security that, in our judgment, peace could be preserved and only through the League that Great Britain could play her full part in Europe. It was for this reason that His Majesty's Government had been anxiously studying whether there was any constructive contribution which they could make in order to promote a solution."

CESSION OF TERRITORY
"I then described to Signor

DOCTOR ATTACKS HOME WORK

Stand Supported By Parents

"CURSE TO THE NATION"

Doctors have once again ranged themselves against educationists on the subject of school children's homework and school examinations.

The latest case has occurred following a report by Dr. T. E. Carr, a school ophthalmic surgeon, to Derbyshire Education Committee, in which he complained that schoolchildren had too much homework.

He said recently to a press reporter:

"Homework is unhealthy, in many respects unnecessary, and a curse to the nation."

"We cannot abolish it altogether, but much can be done to improve the conditions under which children do it, and I strongly suggest that something should be done to minimise the dangers of home lessons."

"Many people claim that it is of great help in passing examinations. For that matter, examinations are a curse in themselves."

Enquiry Demand
Dr. Carr's views have the full support of the Parents' Association, one of whose officials stated:

"A joint board should inquire into this vital problem with a view to stamping out what has long been a menace to school children."

"It is time children were taught creative work, not cramming. Schools where a different policy is followed invariably turn out brighter children."

An official of the National Association of Schoolmasters said the chief danger was that schools instead of treating examinations as something to act as a stimulus to pupils had adopted the habit of judging their standards by examination results.

"The value of homework," he added, "lies in the test of being imposed without supervision and in different surroundings."

Mussolini the kind of contribution which His Majesty's Government had in mind and which I was authorised to make to him as a tentative suggestion. This suggestion was broadly speaking, as follows:—To obtain a final settlement of the dispute between Italy and Abyssinia His Majesty's Government were prepared to offer to Abyssinia a strip of territory in British Somaliland giving Abyssinia access to the sea.

"This proposal was intended to facilitate such territorial and economic concessions by Abyssinia to Italy as might have been involved in an agreed settlement. His Majesty's Government would ask for no concession in return for this arrangement save grazing rights for their tribes in such territory as might be ceded to Italy."

"This suggestion was not lightly made and only the gravity of the situation could justify the cession of British territory without an equivalent return. I much regret that this suggestion did not commend itself to Signor Mussolini, who was unable to accept it as a basis for the solution of the dispute. On my return to Paris I gave M. Laval an account of what had passed with Signor Mussolini."

Replying to a supplementary question, the Foreign Secretary, Sir Samuel Hoare, said he hoped to give further information later. The Government regarded the issues as very urgent and had them under their special and constant consideration.—British Wireless Service.

QUESTIONS IN COMMONS

London, To-day.
Replying in the House of Commons to a question on the jurisdiction of the Anglo-German naval agreement, Sir Samuel Hoare, the British Foreign Minister, yesterday said that it in no way affected the rights, whether arising from part of the Treaty of Versailles or otherwise, of any country not party to an agreement, and that it in no way affected the rights of the United Kingdom as a member of the League of Nations.

He said that the agreement was not a treaty, but a declaration of intent, and that it was not a treaty, but a declaration of intent, and that it was not a treaty, but a declaration of intent.

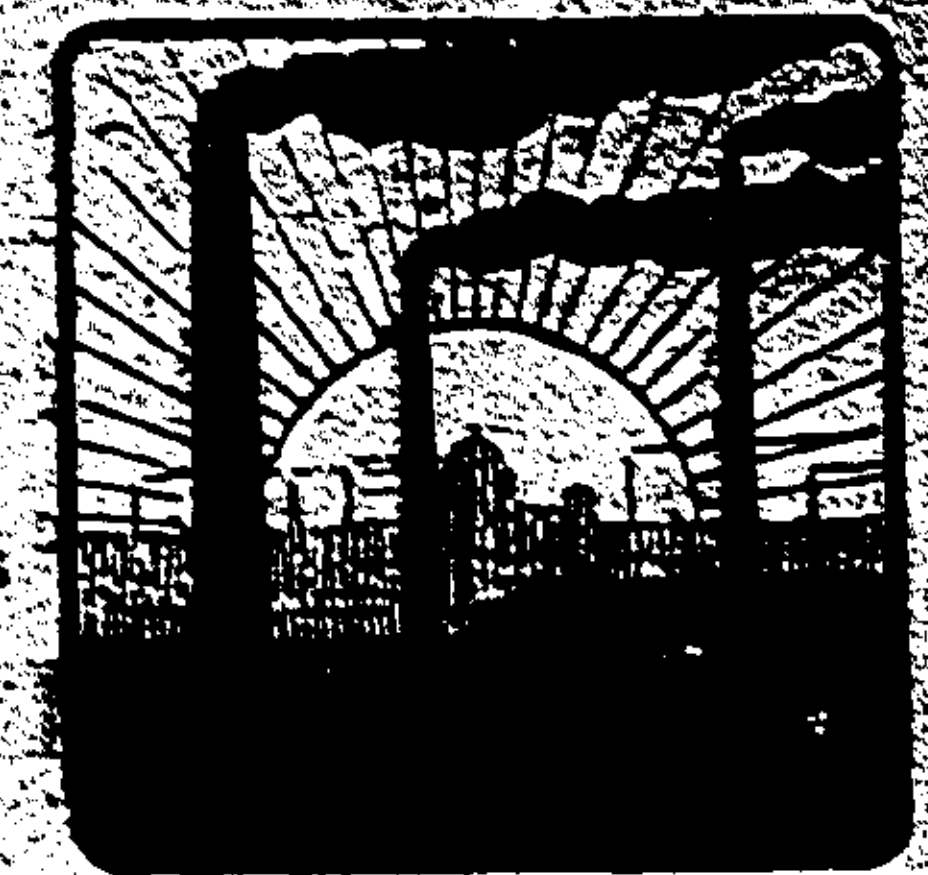

The agreement was not a treaty, but a declaration of intent, and that it was not a treaty, but a declaration of intent, and that it was not a treaty, but a declaration of intent.

Confused Diplomacy

Granted that the various European Powers are above all anxious to avoid war, which we believe to be true, any reader of the daily reports of diplomatic rushes to and fro, proposed pacts and exchanges of notes, enormous appropriations for new ships, new guns, new aeroplanes, stricter conscription and longer service with the colours, must come to the conclusion that our politicians take very quaint methods to secure their object, and that these new methods are greatly inferior to the old.

Conferences, and controversies that end in no solution of anything are very exasperating, and inevitably lead to suspicion that the other side is playing a crooked game. In spite of all the improved methods of communication there is not the least sign that the nations understand each other's point of view even as well as they did thirty years ago; and that amount of understanding was far below the standard of the days when foreign politics were in the hands of a few aristocrats who spoke foreign languages and spent their leisure in making useful contacts with men of light and leading.

The utter mistiness of national policies seems to be due to the fact that we are in a stage of transition, and that nobody will begin to accept the consequences of the new conditions fully and frankly. Take for instance President Wilson's idea for "open conventions openly arrived at" which is embodied in the system of registering treaties at Geneva. No body believes that there have been no secret bargains and agreements. It is quite a general belief, for instance, that Japan and Germany have had something very like a treaty of common action—the name given to it is immaterial—and the simultaneous action taken by both in the way of aggression is strong evidence. The existence of a registration system only adds to the confusion; for it is taken for granted that any document not publicly declared must have some sinister purpose.

Another clear division must be drawn between the system of settlement by discussion and law, and settlement by "Power Diplomacy." The principle of the older style was simply a realist calculation of the military force that any Government could put into the field, and a further calculation of the probability that the force would be used. This would depend on the amount of interest taken, the state of public opinion, financial strength, and so on. The answer to the sum could be frequently stated quite precisely; and the weight attached to arguments and protests was measured to correspond. The principle of macht politik was not invented by Bismarck, but was reduced by him to a system; and he used it to keep the peace for a number of years after he had got what he wanted.

The calculation of numbers and armament is not ideal, but it was intelligible. The appeal to international law as embodied in treaties is also intelligible. The combination of the two systems leads to nothing but distrust—more distrust than would arise of law and justice had not been mentioned at all. It would hardly be an exaggeration to say that the deduction to be drawn from the present German demands for a navy is that it is a sign of sovereignty to be able to drop all talk of law and revert to the old method of menace.

Instead of reverting to the secret diplomacy and the threat of war that led to complications which had never been even explained or discussed for the information of the people who in the long run are most closely affected, there has been a tendency during the tenure of office by Sir John Simon to fall into the old traditional methods of the Foreign Office, which were designed to avoid publicity as a possible danger. The true state of the case is that it is not information that is the danger, but excited comment. We know enough of the world in general to be able to estimate the importance of new developments. The recent German action had the immediate effect of uniting all parties to support the Government, and the reason was simply that the facts were clearly stated.

Fortunately Mr. Baldwin has always shown himself more inclined to take the public into his confidence than any other Minister, and Sir Samuel Hoare is apparently doing his best to follow that good practice. If Ministers complain that the policy they have adopted is often misunderstood, they must remember that England is almost the only large country where discussion is free; and that there is always an impression in other countries that the present comment must have been inspired. The Government is therefore often held responsible for views that are due to a perfectly honest attempt to interpret very defective evidence. It is time that the step forward was taken of a much more candid and frequent explanation of the perplexing currents of demand and counter-

Here There and Everywhere.

WOOLWORTH HEIRESS

When Princess Alexis Mdivani, formerly Miss Barbara Hutton, the Woolworth heiress, arrived at Reno, she was wearing her $1,700 mink coat, but a mink dress would have been more suitable for Reno's summery weather.

At the local airport she was met by 22 motor-car salesmen, eight estate agents, four jewellery salesmen, a man anxious to sell her an aeroplane, and three breeders of prize dogs. Two fortune-tellers completed the town's welcome to one who is regarded as "the greatest thing in divorce" that has yet come to Reno.

To avoid reporters when she was leaving New York for Reno, Princess Alexis, dressed in the clothes of her maid servant, was conveyed in a weather-beaten motor-car from an employment agency near her father's home.

BRANGWYN FOR BRIGHTON

Mr. Frank Brangwyn has presented over 200 etchings and lithographs to the Brighton Corporation.

The gifts have been made as a token of Mr. Brangwyn's appreciation of the facilities granted by the corporation two years ago. He then wanted a big studio in which to finish some cartoons ordered for the decoration of Radio City, New York. The Brighton Corporation allowed him to use an exhibition gallery at the Royal Pavilion.

It is claimed that the Brangwyn collection presented to Brighton is finer than any other Brangwyn collection in England and equalled only by the collections in France, Holland and Japan.

It is hoped to exhibit it next summer.

Mr. Brangwyn is a member of the Fine Arts Committee of Brighton Corporation.

CONVICTS WHO WANT DEGREES

Requests Received
From Prisons

LONDON UNIVERSITY NOT AMENABLE

It seems unlikely that convicts serving long terms of imprisonment will be able to study and sit while in prison for London University degrees.

Mr. W. E. Williams, secretary of the British Institute of Adult Education, who arranges classes in certain prisons, told press representatives that requests had been made by prisoners at Parkhurst for facilities to study and sit for London degrees while in prison, but that the University authorities were not amenable to the suggestion.

Mr. G. F. Goodchild, external registrar of the University, in an interview, said he was not aware that there was any great demand from convicts on the subject. He said that the University would have meant a lot of extra work, going to the prison to examine him. "I know of no one who has asked to study for a degree," he said, "but that request for convicts to study for degrees."

ADOLF HITLER AT CLOSE RANGE

MENTAL OUTLOOK OF A "PRACTICAL MYSTIC"

INCARNATION OF SPIRIT OF GERMAN RACE

(By Viscount Rothermere)

THE most prominent figure in the world to-day is Adolf Hitler. His master-mind magnetises the whole field of foreign politics. Yet, though Hitler's name is on every lip, his individual characteristics are known to few, even in his own country.

After unusual opportunities of observing Herr Hitler at close range, both in private conversation and by a correspondence extending over many months, I would sum up his personality in two words. He is a practical mystic. In him is found the rare combination of dreamer and doer. Like Oliver Cromwell, Joan of Arc, and the Prophet Mohammed, he draws his inspiration from a hidden light not shared by his fellow-men.

Hitler is in the direct tradition of those great leaders of mankind who appear rarely more often than once in two or three centuries. He is the incarnation of the spirit of the German race.

Fervent Faith

Hitler's fervent faith in his own mission is a force that makes itself felt as soon as one comes in contact with him. His intensity reduces to insignificance the frequently discussed topic of whether or not he is sincere. A man so completely possessed by a great purpose has no use for subtleties and shams.

It is far more useful to inquire what exactly is Herr Hitler's conception of his mission, and to what extent it is compatible with European peace.

I believe I can define his aim with accuracy. It is to restore to the German nation its complete sovereignty in internal affairs, and in its external relations to raise it once more to the standing of a world Power of the first class.

These are purposes in which Herr Hitler makes it clear that he will accept no compromise or abatement whatsoever.

The best estimate of human character is derived from observation of many details, small in themselves, and it may therefore be useful that I should put on record the impressions which I myself have gained from contact with him.

Intense Earnestness. The first perception that one's mind registers in Hitler's presence is that of his intense earnestness. His conversation is never casual; his attitude never relaxes. However calm and impassive his manner may be, one feels instinctively that beneath its surface smoulders that fiery purpose which I have described as dominating his whole existence.

His eyes are the most eloquent feature in his face. They are magnetic eyes. They reflect a soul profoundly conscious of the magnitude of the task it has assumed, and they express that intensity of purpose which is the secret of Herr Hitler's unprecedented rise to political power and prominence.

It is rare to see Hitler except in uniform. This is invariably a khaki drill tunic, devoid of any badge of rank and embellished only by his war decoration of the Iron Cross. In his spacious modern office at the Chancellery's Palace, and at luncheon in a private house, I found him as at first. Only at a formal dinner did he appear in the conventional dress coat and white waistcoat. This addition to the simple costume of his Storm Troopers is itself an index to several aspects of his character. It emphasises that he would have meant a lot of extra work, going to the prison to examine him. "I know of no one who has asked to study for a degree," he said, "but that request for convicts to study for degrees."

in the first place, that he still considers his task to be a militant crusade. Hitler will never subside into the stereotyped statesman. Bureaucracies and the routine of administration are uncongenial to him. Like all supreme leaders, he is a lonely man. The public utterances with which he makes history are not the result of long discussion representing a compromise between the divergent views of many minds. Their vigour and clarity are due to the fact that they are the product of Hitler's individual brain, aided only by the advice of one or two intimate counselors.

Simplicity of Character. Another trait of Hitler's character expressed by his dress is its simplicity. In concentrating upon his great political task he has come, like many men with great responsibilities, to adopt the life of an ascetic.

He eats no meat, and has followed Mussolini in giving up both alcohol and tobacco—a practice to whose benefits I myself can testify.

Hitler takes practically no exercise. His only recreations are listening to classical music and watching films in the cinema-theatre which he added to the Chancellery's Palace when having this redecoration after his own designs.

Music is, indeed, the only influence which can relax the Chancellor's stern self-control. He reacts to it in the same intuitive way as he responds to the eager enthusiasm of his vast mass-meetings. The expression of his face alters—even his bearing, visible changes—in accord with the melodies that fall upon his ears.

His love for children and for dogs is a further revelation of the strong strain of sentiment which underlies Herr Hitler's dominating conviction that he is a man with a divinely appointed mission to fulfil. It is this softer side of his nature which exposes him to the fits of profound depression that sometimes overtake him. Swift and sure though Hitler's rise to supreme power in Germany has been, he has known his full share of treachery and disillusionment.

Inevitable Afflictions. Such afflictions are inevitable in a political career, but Hitler's sensitive nature feels them keenly—the more so because he himself is instinctively faithful to his friends. The few men who are in close and constant touch with him have almost all been fellow-workers of his from the beginning. Their loyalty and admiration for their leader, tested through a dozen years of both discouragement and triumph, are the most convincing possible testimony to Adolf Hitler's generous and loyal character.

"BREACH" SUIT APPEAL

£2,000 Award That
Was Set Aside

An appeal was lodged recently by Miss Emily Fender, a nurse, with regard to the result of her action for breach of promise against Sir Anthony St. John Milman.

The case was tried by Mr. Justice Hawkins and a special jury in the King's Bench Division last month, judgment being delivered a week later.

The jury awarded plaintiff £2,000 damages, but Mr. Justice Hawkins entered judgment for defendant on the ground that the action was not maintainable, the promise having been made between the time the nurse and the doctor were engaged, and the decree also granted on the divorce petition of the first lady St. John Milman.

Before declaring the Bank open, Mr. Li Koon-chun said: "In the absence of our Chairman, Sir Shouson Chow, from the Colony on account of his health I have much pleasure in extending to all of you, on behalf of the Directors and the management, a cordial welcome to this opening ceremony of the new and permanent building of the Bank of East Asia, Ltd. In doing so I wish to give you a brief history of the Bank's development."

MEMORABLE OCCASION

"It was 17 years ago on November 11, 1918 when the whole world was rejoicing over the cessation of strife and bloodshed in Europe that a group of well-known merchants headed by Sir Shouson Chow got together and brought into being the Bank of East Asia, Ltd. It was on this memorable day that they signed an agreement and undertook to organize a bank and supply its original capital. Their enterprise at once met with success and on January 1, 1919 the bank was formally opened with a paid-up capital of $2,000,000. At that time the bank was situated at No. 10, Des Voeux Road, Central."

JUBILEE COINS STOLEN

Valuable jewellery, including a set of Queen Victoria Jubilee coins and 12 gold rings set with diamonds and pearls, were stolen from the bank during the absence of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Fung, of 28, Regent Street, at the bank's opening ceremony. The first robbery of the bank's valuables occurred on the day of the opening ceremony.

Mrs. Francis Rattenbury (above), 31-year-old mother, who was acquitted in England's "Sunder-Grey case" when charged with having aided her 13-year-old chauffeur-lover to kill her husband, aged 61, committed suicide when the death sentence was passed on Stoner.

consisted of Sir Shouson Chow, Messrs. Li Koon-chun, Chan Ching-shak, Kan Ying-po, Wong Yung-tong, Mok Ching-kong, P. K. Kwok, the late Mr. Fong Wai-ting, the late Mr. Ng Tsang-luk and the late Mr. Fung Ping-eh, with Mr. Kan Tong-po as its Chief Manager and Mr. Li Tse-fong its Assistant Manager.

RAPID PROGRESS

"The first few years of the bank's existence were characterized by rapid progress. In 1921 the Authorized Capital was increased to $10,000,000 with a Paid-up Capital of $5,000,000 and several well known merchants were invited to join the Board of Directors. At the same time it was found that the premises at No. 2 Queen's Road Central were inadequate to cope with the bank's growing business, and, eventually, the present site, known as Nos. 10 and 10A, Des Voeux Road Central, was acquired with its buildings thereon."

"In 1921, after remodelling, the building at No. 10, Des Voeux Road Central was completed, and the Bank moved into the old building which stood on the present site, and carried on its business until the summer of 1933, when it was again found that the space was barely enough to accommodate its large staff and to cope with the ever increasing activity of its business. Consequently the old building, together with the Go-down at No. 10A, Des Voeux Road Central, was demolished to make room for the present new building we are in to-day."

FAITH IN FUTURE

"For the past 17 years since the bank was founded it has run a course of steady progress and expansion, and the new building, with its many new features which have been skilfully designed by our architect, Mr. C. Little, will be a fitting home for the Bank for many decades of years. In this new building I hope our clients will find every facility for dealing with their daily routine business with the least possible delay, and I trust that they will continue to extend to us their esteemed co-operation in the development of business generally. The Directors, in making their decision to incur this heavy expenditure to build this magnificent home, are showing their faith in the future of the Colony, a faith that will remain unshaken by the present trade depression."

"I shall not detain you any longer by giving you full details of our new building, which you will see for yourself presently. However, in view of the fact that we were the first bank to introduce the system of Safe Deposit Boxes into the Colony I wish to draw your attention to the Safe Deposit Vault on the mezzanine floor. The entrance to this vault is protected by a heavy steel circular door built by the York Safe and Lock Company."

"I think the bank may be proud that such a distinguished gathering has honoured us to-day with their presence. On behalf of the Board of Directors and the management, I thank you."

VOLUNTARY WINDING UP OF THE A.O.R.C.

Petition Granted In Supreme Court

OFFICIAL RECEIVER AS LIQUIDATOR

A petition brought before His Honour the Chief Justice, Sir Atholl MacGregor, in the Supreme Court this morning, for the voluntary winding up of the local branch of the American Oriental Finance Corporation, as advised by the Board of Directors in Shanghai, was granted. The grounds for the application were that the company was unable to meet its liabilities.

Mr. F. C. Jenkin, K.C. instructed by Mr. M. H. Turner of Messrs. Deacons, appeared on behalf of the company, while Mr. Harold Lee represented the first four creditors.

"CAFE WISEMAN"

Opening Of New Restaurant

REMARKABLY CLEAN AND UP-TO-DATE KITCHEN

Yet another rendezvous has been added to the Colony's attractions with the opening yesterday of the new Cafe Wiseman, which is situated in the basement of Exchange Building.

Cafe Wiseman, which has a tradition worth living up to, presents an attractive picture when one enters it from the street, with its delicately shaded indirect lighting and white grained marble walls and roof, while all the furniture is of the most modern design.

A visit to the kitchen impresses one with the vast improvements that have taken place in the methods of cooking food during the past few years. No longer is it necessary to watch the clock closely while boiling an egg—no automatic machine times it. No longer is it required, of one to make tea by lifting it with a spoon, for by pressing a button the exact quantity is discharged into the pot from an ingenious container.

The same applies to the coffee, which is made in a large urn so cleverly thought out and constructed that all that human hands have to do is pour the coffee out. The cleanliness, method and direction of this large kitchen can only be equalled—not bettered.

TAXI-DRIVER ASSAULTED

Attacked By Four Passengers

A daring robbery occurred shortly after 1 a.m. to-day on Island Road, when Lai Chun, 31-year-old driver of taxi No. 569, was assaulted and robbed of $11 by four men.

The driver was approached by the men in Garden Road at about 1 a.m., and instructed to drive to Stanley. Just before reaching Repulse Bay he was ordered to stop the car. The men then seized him, and, after assaulting him with their fists, searched his pockets and took the money.

After the robbers had decamped, the driver turned back and reported the incident to No. 2 Police Station at Wanchai. No arrests have yet been effected.

World Famous Watering Place Celebrates Centenary

Bad Weather. To-day—This world-famous watering place, whose thermal waters have brought relief to countless thousands suffering from rheumatism and affections of the heart, celebrated on Monday the 100th anniversary of the opening of its first bathing place for public use. Although the waters had been known for centuries, they had not been used as a medicinal water until 1835, when a small bathing place was erected on the site.

To-day's Short Story

Mrs. Green's Offence

By Colin Howard

MRS. Green lives in Kildare street, which is in a dingy, cheerless neighbourhood where the colours of the good world never penetrate, and where a chance sunbeam seems grotesquely out of place. A grimy, smoke-sodden district it is, of dirty, narrow streets and ugly brick. The people who live here have no time to be saddened by their surroundings. The very babies laugh but little, and before long they will not laugh at all. Too soon—so much too soon—they will discover that life for them means an interminable struggle for existence.

In Kildare street existence stands for respectability. They have placed respectability upon an altar, and they worship it fiercely in their endeavours to achieve it.

Mrs. Green used to be respectable. In those days she was well liked, for she kept her doorstep scrupulously whitened, her windows were never uncurtained, and she worked hard at charring. As, indeed, she had to, for Sam Green was a luckless fellow who could never hold a job for long. But Sam Green died, and it was then that Mrs. Green fell from grace.

"AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY"

"Novel" Plot Slayer Executed

Rockview (Pennsylvania). Robert Edwards, known as the "American Tragedy" slayer, was electrocuted in the Rockview (Pennsylvania) prison, a few minutes after midnight last night. He spent his last hours reading the Bible.

Edwards, a youth of 23, committed murder in circumstances parallel to those described in Dreiser's novel, "An American Tragedy."

He murdered his sweetheart, Freda McKechnie, aged 26, by hitting her on the head while they were out in a boat and then throwing her overboard.

His object was to be rid of the girl in order to be free to marry another, and wealthier girl with whom he had become infatuated. This was the central episode of the novel.

WOMAN'S CLOTHES ABLAZE

Suffers Severe Burns On Legs And Hands

Mrs. Annie Gillett, aged 29, of Collingwood-road, Mitcham, was taken to Wilson Hospital, Mitcham, recently and detained with severe burns on both legs and hands.

Shortly after her children had gone to school she rushed into the next-door house with her clothes aflame. Neighbours then found that the front room on the ground floor was blazing and they tackled the flames themselves.

When Mitcham fire brigade reached the spot, all the bedding had been destroyed and considerable damage done to the room.

SPANISH UPRISING DENIED

Madrid.—The Ministry of the Interior recently categorically denied rumours that a seditious military uprising had been uncovered and that defence measures had been taken by the Government.

and brought upon herself the curse of the street.

Ellen Green is a meek, tired-looking woman with wispy hair and a pale face. She is one of those persons whom it is impossible to imagine young and attractive. But she must have been both of these at one time. For Sam Green courted her with ardent persistence and, improvident and fool-hardy though it was, persuaded her into marrying him. But that was many years ago.

TO-MORROW'S STORY

To-morrow's story will be "Boiled Sweets," by Marian Bowser.

There are a number in Kildare street who can remember the Greens in those days, for people come to the street and people leave it, people are born into it continuously and, occasionally and with great reluctance, people die out of it. Yet, in the main, the occupants remain unaltered, and there are many who recollect the evening when Sam and Ellen first appeared, trundling a borrowed handbarrow stacked precariously high with rickety furniture.

The furniture, it seems, was always falling off into the roadway, and Ellen kept stooping to pick up the fallen article and hand it to Sam, who thanked her profusely and replaced it in exactly the same position as before, so that straightway it fell off once more. And that must have been rather typical of Sam.

They stopped outside the door of the tiny cottage they had rented, but they did not go in at once. They stood gazing proudly at the outside, and even crossed the street to look at it from there. Then Sam produced the key, very impressively—only he couldn't find the right pocket, just at first—and he opened the door, and he and Ellen took possession.

To-day, Mrs. Green does not "belong." She will never "belong" again. She still lives in that little cottage where she and her husband began and experienced and ended their wedded life. She still lives as unobtrusively, as correctly, as she did then. But there is a stigma against her name which will not wholly pass with death itself. The street is slow to forgive anything that reflects adversely upon its respectability.

Sam was in work when he was married, but through sheer inability he was soon deprived of it. Poor as it had been, the lack of it made some considerable difference to their means, and Ellen had to go out with her pail and her famel little child and return a little later.

Sam was honestly distressed at that, and even threatened forcefully to take the work over from her. This, naturally, could not be considered with any seriousness, for charring is not work becoming to a man; but Mrs. Green told others of his attempt, and he was thought of the more highly because of it.

Charring is not especially remunerative work, and during Sam's long periods of "helpless idleness" there is no doubt that the Greens did not live too well. But they "kept up appearances," and the street saw it and appreciated it.

The landlord, who made a lordly journey down Kildare street every Tuesday morning, never failed to find his rent awaiting him on the kitchen-table in a little heap of silver and copper. It was known that one hard-winter Sam had been forced to take a pair of blankets to a pawnshop—not the one in the next street, of course, but a shop a mile distant—and it was known also that a welfare worker, calling by chance a few days afterwards with the keys for a distribution of blankets at the Parish Hall, went away from the Greens with her stock of blankets undiminished. The street did not grieve. It merely approved.

Now and again Sam would and comparatively good job, and then there would be great times of new clothing of nightgowns, and the street would be proud of him.

IN DANGER of Breakdown

There are many people who on the verge of a nervous collapse. The stress of modern life is alone a great strain on the nervous system, and when, in addition, there is some extra worry, a shock or an illness, it is not surprising that the nerves give way. As the nervous system governs the whole body, it follows that nervous disturbances cause acute diseases. Among the symptoms usually experienced by sufferers are insomnia, failure of memory, irritability, headaches, lack of appetite, and severe depression.

But if you are a victim of nervous debility, there is no need to despair. Even severe nerve trouble may be overcome by improving the condition of the blood. That is why the blood-tonic treatment by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills succeeds where other treatments have failed. These pills make new blood, rich in the elements on which the nerves thrive, and in this way they have effected many remarkable cures of nervous disorders.

CLERGY AND MENTAL WELFARE

Attitude Criticised By Doctor

PHANTASY SOLUTIONS RATHER THAN PROGRESSION

London. An attack was made on the clergy for their attitude towards mental welfare by Dr. H. Crichton Miller, honorary physician to the Institute of Medical Psychology, when he spoke in Glasgow at the annual conference of the Scottish Association of Mental Welfare.

The healthy community, he said, must be described as one in which the mental hospitals were nearly empty, the mental defectives reduced to zero, crime enormously reduced, and suicides very rare. In point of fact our mental hospitals were becoming fuller and our suicide rate was going up.

Those Complexes In the daily newspapers they frequently read of the prevalence of "inferiority complex" cases, and shattered nerves.

"It is sometimes supposed that great injury is done to the emotional development of pupils by corporal punishment," Dr. Miller said, "but I would say from my experience that much more harm is done by the sarcastic or sneering master than by the cane."

"It must be said of the school teacher as a whole that no section of the community has shown a keener interest in modern views of mental hygiene."

Exhortation With regard to the clergy, it should be noted that, whereas the whole spirit of modern psychology was in favour of facing facts, the minister of religion tended to proffer exhortation, to turn away from the essential conflict, and to seek peace in a phantasy solution that was regressive rather than progressive.

Doctors, he added, were expected to minister to mental peace, and they fulfilled this obligation creditably, although their responsibility for mental health was small compared with that of teachers and clergy.

DUKE ORDERED OFF RIVER

Threatened By Man Wearing Mask

The Duke of Devonshire, who is staying at his Irish seat, Lismore Castle, County Waterford, was fishing on the River Blackwater, at Careysville, accompanied by a girl last month when he was ordered off the river by a man wearing a mask.

The man emerged from a shrubbery and inquired if that was the Duke's boat. Request Ignored On learning that it was, he approached and ordered the Duke off the river. The Duke was playing a fish at the time. He did not comply with the request.

The man walked away but returned, and is said to have told the Duke to be out of the place by eight o'clock that night, or otherwise he would be taken.

It is also stated that the man then left and fired a shot in the air from a revolver. The Civil Guards are making investigations into the affair.

CURIOUS FREAK OF NATURE

Boy Half Blonde Half Brunette

Nature has played a strange prank on a little Los Angeles boy who is three-and-a-half years old. Although physically normal, he resembles his father and mother in a peculiar way. The left side of his head is blonde and the right brunette.

Seen from the left hand side he has a fair complexion, a blue eye and blonde hair. Seen from the right hand side he is dark with a brown eye and Auburn hair. Photographs of his hair show a clear division in the center, the dark one side, right the other.

Like so many other justices, James Clark McReynolds came to the Supreme Court of the United States via the Attorney-Generalship of America. He is seen in a Cabinet meeting with President Wilson, Secretary of the Treasury, W. G. McAdoo and William Jennings Bryan. He is one of the two bachelor members of the Court, of which he has been a member for 20 years, and was born 73 years ago in Kentucky.

AGE LIMIT FOR JUDGES

Idea Severely Denounced

LORD HEWART DEFENDS PRESENT COLLEAGUES

Lord Hewart, the Lord Chief Justice, who is 65, made a pungent reply to the suggestion of a retiring age for High Court judges during his evidence last month before the Royal Commission on the Despatch of Business at Common Law.

"I am comparatively young," he said. "I was caught young. I was made a judge at 52 and I hope to go on for another twenty or 30 years."

Lord Peel, the chairman, quoting from the terms of reference of the Commission, had asked Lord Hewart whether he thought a retiring age should be imposed on High Court judges appointed in the future.

Lord Hewart replied that the question immediately suggested was why was a retiring age desirable in the future if it was not desirable in the past.

"If the Knife Fell" "I look at the list of my colleagues. I do not know what the proposed age may be, but whatever it was, however the knife fell, it would take off a good many of the senior men."

"I ask myself this question: 'Where in the world is Britain going to find the reservoir of learning, experience, and wisdom which is to be found among those senior judges?'"

"Take my friend Mr. Justice Avory. He is now, I think, in his 84th year. He sits by my side day by day in Crown Paper cases and in the Court of Criminal Appeal."

"If in Doubt" "I safely say, 'If in doubt look it up in Mr. Justice Avory.' He is an encyclopedia of knowledge not only in criminal law but in all the law with which Crown Paper cases have to do."

"If he had been retired or had retired at the age of 70 or 75, his great knowledge and wisdom would have been lost to the country for years. Why? I cannot understand why."

"If it even began to appear in regard to a particular judge, that he was ceasing to be fit for his work, what happens? One of his colleagues, who is most intimate with him drops him a hint, and the hint is taken."

"I know of no case, and I speak with 40 years' knowledge, in which it could truly be said that a judge lingered on beyond his time."

TICKLISH RULINGS IN PRECEDENCE

Mayors And High Sheriffs

GARTER KING OF ARMS DECIDES

In view of the uncertainty which exists in some places as to the precedence to be accorded to a Mayor when the High Sheriff of the County is present, Sir Gerald Woods Wollaston, Garter King of Arms, has just given the following ruling:

The High Sheriff of the county represents the King and as such has precedence within his jurisdiction over a Mayor, even within his own borough, when both are present officially but in the capacity of guests.

But apart from this, in my opinion, and the same view has been expressed by my predecessors in office, Section 15 (5) of the Municipal Corporations Act does not give to a Mayor the unqualified general precedence which is sometimes claimed under the section by Mayors.

Mayor As Host In my opinion the intention of the words used in the section was merely to give statutory authority for that which would otherwise have depended upon common sense and good feeling—namely, that on all municipal occasions, whether of business or entertainment, the Mayor should preside, or act as host. It was not the intention of the Act to give the Mayor social precedence, even within the borough, over those who are entitled to rank above him in the general scale of precedence.

After giving further explanation, he concludes that social precedence conferred directly by the Sovereign by Royal Warrant, or otherwise conferred or sanctioned by him, must prevail.

SPANISH FAMILIES GET LAND

Once Belonged To Spanish Grandees

Thousands of families have been installed on land confiscated from enemies of the State by the Spanish Republic, through the efforts of the Agrarian Reform Institute. It was learned here recently.

Since this organisation commenced its work, some 13,000 families have been placed throughout the 57,000 hectares, taken away from Spanish Grandees.

Meanwhile, several technical councillors of the Institute, including Mr. Benayas, former Minister of Agriculture, have opened a "libel suit" against the Institute, which has been severely criticised by the press.

Mrs. Green's Offence

tried-fish shop. And the street gossamer that money was being saved also for the first duty when money was found was to save a portion of it. There was usually a special object for the hoarding. What the Green's special object could be was never known. But it did not greatly matter, for it never achieved realization.

Once, plainly, their savings almost attained to the required level. That could be seen from the way Mrs. Green went about her work meek as ever, but with a kind of humble triumphant expectancy. But Sam, not unexpectedly, lost his job again and, to cap misfortune, Ellen was taken ill with neuritis, when, of course, she could not go out charring. The fund dwindled more quickly than it had grown, and by the time Ellen was out once more with her pail and flannel their savings had all gone.

But, undaunted, they made yet another start, and things might have gone better this time had not an epidemic of economy seemed to sweep those who customarily employed Mrs. Green. And she, being informed by them that they had decided to "do for themselves, for a bit," had recourse again to the tiny hoard.

Kildare-street was a poor street, but few in it can have understood the depths of poverty to which the Greens sometimes descended.

They must have been married more than thirty years when Sam died. He was ill for a long while, and Ellen needed every bit of the incredible energy her sparse frame must have contained in order to cope both with the nursing of her husband and providing the means for the upkeep of their home.

The street sent in plentiful broth, and similar delicacies, for Sam. In time of illness it was no disgrace to accept such offerings.

It was not until after Sam's death that Ellen's true ignobility was exposed by a manifestation of unprecedented unattractiveness. Unnaturalness! That was the only word for it.

For Mrs. Green gave Sam a very miserable funeral indeed. In Kildare-street a funeral is the very hallmark of respectability. In whatever scrabbling poverty the deceased may have lived, in death, at any rate, it is required that pomp should be his. To this end the inhabitants subscribe to burial clubs, so that, no matter how unexpectedly death may come, the funeral shall always be adequate.

It was known that Sam Green had not neglected this important consideration.

But there was no question about it—Mrs. Green "skimped" the funeral.

The undertaker was plainly contemptuous of the shoddy turn-out, and more than a little ashamed of his connection with it. He explained a great many times that Mrs. Green had particularly instructed him to cut the price as low as he possibly could, emphasizing declining all the proposals he put forward for making the funeral a little more stylish.

Even so, this would not have completed the degradation of Mrs. Green in Kildare-street. It might have been assumed that the funeral money from Sam's benefit club had been swallowed up by the heavy expenses to which she had been put during his long illness.

But this was not the case. Three days later—only three days after Sam had been laid to rest—Mrs. Ellen Green bought a new hat and went boldly off to spend a week of holiday at Brighton!

It was a black affront to Kildare-street. It was not as though Mrs. Green were in need of a holiday—although that would not have been much of an excuse—for she looked no more tired than she always did. But to spend the money, that should have gone to putting her husband away decently, in mere frivolous holiday making—it was immoral!

When Mrs. Green came back from her holiday still wearing her new hat and without a scrap of black about her, she was plain to show what the street thought of her conduct. They were not by any means content to let her go down to the Public Health and Buildings Ordinance, 1908.

Other, more business-like, remarks were made to her, and Mrs. Green continued to live in her little cottage in Kildare-street. Nobody knew how she felt her ostracism. Nobody could ever tell anything with Mrs. Green.

Excepting one woman, who, hearing that Ellen had lost her husband, and being uncertain of the circumstances, gave her work to do. And, one morning, the woman found Mrs. Green sitting back upon her heels with the kitchen floor only half done. Her face was working a little, and her fingers picked at her coarse-sacking apron.

"Why, Mrs. Green?" said the woman. "Whatever—"

"It's nothing, mum," said Mrs. Green. "I'm that ashamed you should have found me."

The woman was sympathetic. Bit by bit she managed to get out of Ellen how her life was being made miserable by her neighbours. "You could move, you know," she suggested.

"I ain't going to leave the 'ouse where me and one 'usband lived so long," replied Ellen obstinately.

Then the woman put a question that had been puzzling her.

"But why did you spend all that money on a holiday when you couldn't afford it?" she asked.

"It was me 'oneymoon, mum."

"Your—honeymoon?"

"Yes, Sam an' me, we always meant to 'ave a week at Brighton for our 'oneymoon. We couldn't 'ave it just at first, an' we kept putting it off and off. 'Next year,' Sam 'ud say to me, and 'Next year, Sam!' I'd say to 'im."

"So you never went for your honeymoon?"

"No, mum. Not until Sam died. Then I took the insurance money what I got from Sam's club."

She looked straight in front of her. A smile curved her lips.

"Brighton's a lovely place, ain't it, mum? I did enjoy myself. All the sands, an' the waves.... Ah, well!"

She immersed her flannel in the steaming bucket, wrung it dry, and, leaning forward, swept damp arcs across the old cloth.

For good or evil, the future of England, as the greatest world Power, is bound up with the actions of this man, who is the uncontested ruler of the strongest Continental nation.

The present tendency of our public opinion is to form hasty opinions about him from some isolated action or aspect of his immense campaign for the rehabilitation of Germany. From such judgments, based on insufficient or misleading evidence, disastrous international misunderstandings may easily arise.

It is reassuring to see that Herr Hitler's recent Reichstag speech has greatly increased his popularity in England. I am profoundly convinced that the better he is known to the mass of the British nation the higher its appreciation of him will be and the closer will become the relations between the two countries.

ASAMA SHRINE MODELLED IN ICING SUGAR

Interesting Exhibit On N.Y.K. Liner
EIGHT BAKERS KEPT BUSY ON PACIFIC TRIP
In the Dining Saloon of the N.Y.K. liner Asama Maru, situated on the centre table for all the passengers to inspect and admire, is a replica of one of the most famous and picturesque shrines in Japan, the Asama Shrine, Omiya-Machi, Shizuoka-Ken, about 50 miles from Tokyo.
The model, which has been made to scale and copies from a picture-postcard, is constructed entirely of icing sugar and was made under the personal supervision of the chief baker on board the ship, Mr. F. Hashikura. No detail has been omitted, not even the small tortoiseshell which walk sedately along the brown sugar bottom of the pond at the entrance to the shrine.
Here is some of the interesting data concerning the model. It took eight bakers 21 days to complete, most of the work being done during the ship's last voyage across the Pacific. One hundred and twenty pounds of moist icing sugar was used to construct the walls, roof, floor and trees, not to mention the countless deer on the green lawns. Gelatine was also needed by the builders, one pound being used to give the buildings substance. In addition, 15 pounds of corn starch and one pound of colouring were also needed. The total cost of the shrine, complete in every detail, was 21 yen, ($13.50 local currency).

Some most spectacular flying was seen when the German removed his hands from the controls and waved them in the air. He purposely flew low to enable spectators to see that his hands were not guiding the Focke-Wulf biplane. On several occasions he inverted his machine while climbing and diving.
Mr. Achelis thrilled the witnesses on the South-west aerodrome when he landed the plane on one wheel and after touching the ground took off again. Laymen and aviators were impressed by the German's stunt flying.
"It is better than the movies," was the general comment.

MILLE LAVAL ENGAGED

Premier's Future Son-in-law Related To Roosevelt
"CHINA MAIL" SPECIAL
Paris, To-day.
The engagement was announced here yesterday of the daughter of Premier Laval, Mademoiselle Jose Laval, who has frequently accompanied her father on diplomatic journeys abroad to Count Chambrun, nephew of the French Ambassador at Rome.
Mademoiselle Laval's fiancé is a lawyer with offices in New York and Paris, and is, on his mother's side, related to President Roosevelt—Trans-Ocean Service.

GERMAN EX-ARMY MEN VISIT FRANCE

Some 82 delegates of all the countries comprised within the F.I.D.A.C. are taking part in the deliberations, while Germany is represented by five emissaries from the National Socialist "War Victims' Relief Organisation," the National Socialist Front-Fighters' League (formerly the Steel Helmets), and the Kyffhauser League of War Veterans.
One of the French delegates is Deputy Jean Goy, who was one of the first promoters of meetings between French and German ex-service men—Trans-Ocean Service.

DELEGATION AT LYONS

After depositing a wreath at the war memorial the German visitors were given a reception at the Town Hall, where Minister Herriot, who is also Mayor of Lyons, delivered a short speech, thanking the Germans for breaking their journey at Lyons and adding that he "fully appreciated this gesture."

CO-OPERATION NEEDED

After stressing the desirability of a rapprochement between the two nations, "of which each has its own geniuses and ideals, and its own outlook on life, but both of which seem destined to make an important contribution to peaceful civilisation," M. Herriot went on to say: "If these two nations should turn their backs on each other, it would be a terrible blow for humanity. Everything should be done to prevent such a catastrophe. You have done well in coming here. According to the old French proverb, 'One swallow does not make a summer,' but it is necessary to have the courage to be the first swallow, so that others may follow. I welcome you as one welcomes the first swallow, as the harbinger of spring."—Trans-Ocean Service.

NEW DEAL FOR SOVIET WORKERS

More Vital Than Machines
STALIN'S DEMANDS
Moscow.
Stalin has decided that the day has arrived for a new era in Soviet Russia—an era in which less regard shall be paid to machines and more to human beings.

"The quality of the staffs which run our great country is now the deciding factor," he declared to several hundred military cadets who were passing out of the Soviet equivalent of Woolwich and Sandhurst.
"We have built our factories, our plants, our collective farms, and our Army. In doing these things we used to declare that technique decided everything. We have now left that period behind."
"We have the technique to achieve. What we now lack is a full appreciation of the human element which must administer all these things we have built."
This is regarded as a definite order by the Red leader to the whole Governmental machine of Russia, a blunt command to mend its callous ways of treating the human beings engaged in Red industry and the Red Army alike.
Bureaucratic And Soulless
After speaking of the "technically backward semi-pauper and virtually ruined country" inherited by the Soviet—a country with a semi-literate population, in which industry was drowned in a sea of small peasant farmsteads Stalin said:
"We are now emerging from a period during which there has been a famine in machines to enter on a period of famine in terms of human beings."
"Bolsheviks have not yet grasped the essential importance of human quality, otherwise we should not have such a disgusting attitude towards people, staffs, and workers, little and big, regardless of their domain."
"Leaders should help, encourage, and promote them. We see too many instances of a soulless bureaucratic and downright dirty attitude towards workers. Very often people are flung about like pawns."
